

MISSION

VCU School of Public Health is committed to improving health, well-being and equity for all populations through education, discovery, dissemination and co-learning with the communities served. To fulfill this mission, the VCU School of Public Health:

- Cultivates innovative thought leaders, nurtures diverse and creative scholars, and trains the next generation of researchers, educators and practitioners equipped to serve the people of Virginia, the nation and the world.
- Conducts and translates rigorous research, implements science-informed practices and disseminates solutions to prevent disease and promote health for all populations.
- Collaborates with communities, prioritizing those who experience a disproportionate burden of illness or adverse outcomes to enhance opportunities for vibrant, equitable and healthy lives.
