

ORIENTATION

VCU Orientation is an essential next step in preparing new undergraduate students for their first semester at VCU on the Monroe Park Campus.

There are three main components of orientation: an in-person or virtual orientation session, several required training modules and successful advising and course registration. Orientation is the time to connect with other new students, experience campus and learn more about academic colleges/schools and the resources available.

VCU recognizes families and supporters as important partners in student success. Families and supporters are invited to orientation with their student to gain knowledge about VCU resources and be positioned to support their student's academic journey and ultimate success.

To learn more about VCU Orientation, visit the Orientation and Transition Programs (<https://orientation.vcu.edu/>) website. New undergraduate students on the MCV campus, as well as graduate and professional students, should contact their individual department for further information about any orientation requirements they may have.
